ABSTRACT

A method including determining a first integration time for a first color channel and determining a second integration time for a second color channel, where the second integration time is shorter than the first integration time. Then, the second integration time is divided into a set of integration times. A first sensor is integrated over the first integration time; and, a second sensor is integrated over the set of integration times. An apparatus for performing the method.